Vicarious Trauma –
Who is at risk?

1. Anyone who, by nature is empathetic is at risk for vicarious traumatization.

2. Any adoptive parent who does not allow himself/herself sufficient recovery time is at risk for vicarious traumatization.

3. Any adoptive parent who has experienced his/her own personal trauma and has not had the opportunity for his or her own personal healing is at risk for vicarious traumatization.

4. Any adoptive parent who finds himself/herself isolated from family, friends, and professional supports is at risk for vicarious traumatization.

5. Any adoptive parent who struggles due to a lack of systemic resources or who has an inability to ask for help is a risk for vicarious traumatization.

6. Any adoptive parent who has come to belief that he/she has failed “the mission.”

Principles of Success for Parenting Children Who Come from Hard Places

1. Understand that the child’s behavior isn’t about you. Monitor your responses and ask yourself- am I taking this personally? If the answer if yes, your next question is, “what are you going to do to change your emotional responses to the child in your home?”

2. Pay attention to the messages you say to yourself. “I am a horrible parent.” “I am a failure.” “If anybody knew how I have failed, they would be horrified.”, etc, etc., etc.

3. Return to your initial motivation for adopting. Stop and take note of the improvements your child has made. Revise your unrealistic expectations for your child and for yourself.

4. Continue to learn and study regarding the importance of key elements of healing for traumatized children: understanding the impact of trauma, maximizing a child’s sense of felt safety, building healing connections and learning to connect before correction.

5. Be aware that this CAN happen to YOU. Know what signs to look for. Remember the frog in the kettle/ Be attuned to the reality it IS happening and recognize it for what it is. Don’t ignore the boiling pot.
6. Regularly examine and explore what is happening to each family member – especially mom.

7. Do a role check. Is one parent carrying the load?

8. Take good care of yourself physically, emotionally, mentally, spiritually –(but you already know all of that 😊)

9. Talk about it with people who understand – don’t run from connections.

10. Find balance in your life. (There is no glory in martyrdom)
Identifying Your Circle of Support

Created by Heather Bench, an adoptive mom
Dayton, Ohio

This exercise allows you to identify a person or multiple people who represent the traits of a support person in your life. Anyone who represents the following traits, list their name in the provided box on the next page.

The Rock - A person(s) who will remain in your life during the difficult times and continue to love you unconditionally.

The Wise - A person(s) who will always tell the truth even when it is not what you want to hear.

The Learner – A person(s) who will learn alongside of you.

The Helping Hand - A person(s) who understands and is aware when you may need a break and steps in to assist.

Advocate - A person(s) who will always stand up for you and continue to support you.

Recognizing the Early Signs of Parenting Stress

Paying attention to how we are responding to the added stress of parenting a traumatized child is absolutely key to remaining healthy. To ignore symptoms of stress is to invite many physical and emotional health problems.

Check the ones that apply to you. Have you noticed any increase in the following areas:

1. Physical symptoms:

   - Headaches
   - Body tensions, muscle aches
   - Stomach problems
   - Sleep problems
   - Rapid heartbeat
   - Weight gain or loss
   - Dizziness
   - Nausea

2. Behavioral Symptoms:

   - Increased smoking
   - Increased drinking or drug use
   - Procrastination
   - Grinding teeth

If you have checked a number of these, it is time to make changes. We are going to look now at the self-care assessment. You will use this to identify areas in which you can better take care of yourself.
Self Care Assessment

The following worksheet for assessing self-care is not exhaustive, merely suggestive. Feel free to add areas of self-care that are relevant for you and rate yourself on how often and how well you are taking care of yourself these days.

When you are finished, look for patterns in your responses. Are you more active in some areas of self-care but ignore others? Are there items on the list that make you think, "I would never do that"? Listen to your inner responses, your internal dialogue about self-care and making yourself a priority. Take particular note of anything you would like to include more in your life.

Rate the following areas according to how well you think you are doing:

5 = I do this frequently
4 = I do this occasionally
3 = I barely or rarely do this
2 = I never do this
1= This never occurred to me
